

Prepaid Phone Cards: What Consumers Should Know

Prepaid phone cards can be purchased and used for a flat fee to make long-distance telephone calls, with specified amounts of call time to certain destinations. For example, promotions of such cards may offer "$5 for 1000 Minutes" to a foreign country.

After purchasing a card, you use it by calling an access number, which may be a local telephone number or a toll-free number. You will then be prompted to provide a personal identification number, usually listed on the card you purchased, and the telephone number you wish to call. An automated voice may tell you how much time you have on your card, as well as give you other information or options.

What should I look for before purchasing a prepaid phone card?

Be sure you fully understand all of the instructions, fees, terms and conditions:

- Read the fine print on the packaging or back of the card to understand conditions or limitations on the use of the card.
- Understand the rates for your particular card and any fees that may be assessed to use the card. In some cases the card's value will be reduced by "post-call," "disconnect" or "hang-up" fees each time you use the card, or by a "maintenance" fee charged after you use the card for the first time and again at regular intervals.
- Check whether the advertised minutes for the card apply only to a single call or can be used for multiple calls.
- Check the card's expiration date to avoid losing unused minutes.
- Look for a toll-free customer service number provided with or on the card, and make sure you will not be charged for calling it.
- Ask your friends and family to recommend cards they have used.

Beware of false advertising

Ads from certain prepaid card providers claim that buyers can make hundreds or thousands of minutes of calls to certain advertised destinations for just a few dollars. In reality, consumers using such cards could make calls for just a fraction of those minutes due to hidden fees and surcharges. In 2015, the FCC fined six companies $30 million for deceptive marketing of calling cards.

Common complaints

Consumer complaints related to such cards may include:

- Access numbers and/or PINs don't work
- Service/access numbers are always busy
- Card issuers go out of business, making their cards useless
- Rates are higher than advertised or contain undisclosed fees
- Undisclosed "post-call" fees deducted after a call's completion
- Undisclosed "maintenance" fees deducted after a call or at regular intervals
- Cards charges when a call does not go through
- Poor quality connections
- Cards expire without the purchaser's knowledge

- Per-call fees deducted from the call time

If you have a problem with a prepaid phone card

Try calling the customer service number listed on the card. If you're unable to contact the card issuer, you can file a complaint with the FCC.

Filing a complaint

You have multiple options for filing a complaint:

- File a complaint online at <https://consumercomplaints.fcc.gov>
- By phone: 1-888-CALL-FCC (1-888-225-5322); TTY: 1-888-TELL-FCC (1-888-835-5322); ASL: 1-844-432-2275
- By mail (please include your name, address, contact information and as much detail about your complaint as possible):

Federal Communications Commission
Consumer and Governmental Affairs Bureau
Consumer Inquiries and Complaints Division
45 L Street NE
Washington, DC 20554

Other problems?

If you are having a problem with a calling card retailer, try calling or writing your local Consumer Affairs or Better Business Bureau or state Attorney General's Office. These phone numbers are often found in the blue pages or government section of your local telephone directory.

Prepaid phone cards are often marketed by companies other than the telephone company or service provider. If you have concerns about deceptive or false advertising or marketing practices, you can contact the Federal Trade Commission at visit www.consumer.ftc.gov or submit a complaint to the FTC online at: <https://www.ftccomplaintassistant.gov>.

Alternate formats

To request this article in an alternate format - braille, large print, Word or text document or audio - write or call us at the address or phone number at the bottom of the page, or send an email to fcc504@fcc.gov.

Last Reviewed 02/25/20

